Beyond Confusion to Trust and Affirmation.

Joseph George's book of poems, philosophical reflections and spiritual meditations needs no introduction.

It is a well known fact that in the case of books containing deeply subjective and reflective ruminations of an author any introduction to the book by outsiders can sometimes mislead the reader. In fact, it is the reader's right to exercise his or her creative imagination while dealing with poetic, symbolic and highly personal writings.

I admit, therefore, my inability to delve deeper into this book by George Joseph and write a useful introduction to this collection of terse, occasionally abstract and metaphysical pieces. Since the author has gently persuaded me to go through it and jot down a few words I ventured to do so. That much by way of an apology!

The author George Joseph seems to be a very pious man, and much attached to his Christian tradition and spirituality. Mystical and devoted to the divine, he breaks forth occasionally in prayers like, for example, "Lead me, O my God in virtuous and kind path", but he never asks God for material boons even if God comes to him personally. On the contrary, "I thought not to ask any silly needs but worthy." His prayerful need is "not to be rich, never to be selfish, but pervading peace and meditation time". Sometimes the reader is not sure if he looks at some of the rituals and routine beliefs of fellow Christians with admiration or with ironically quizzical eyes. At times he doubts the merit of his own prayers like "My pennyless prayers-/ Who will take granted/ Like two pence prayers of the widow pecunious?"

Some of his reflections are presented in the guise of dream states. He dreams that he is a white rabbit, protected and nurtured by God Almighty. There are rabbit meat lovers and other profit oriented people who look at the rabbit with lusty eyes. But the rabbit finds solace and courage in the firm trust in God who takes care of the poor defenceless creature. This is a beautiful image of a helpless and feeble person who is vulnerable and is liable to be exploited by clever self-seeking people, but trusts in the power of a just God who vindicates him.

Towards the end of the book, Joseph George immerses himself in ethical and philosophical reflections drawing inspiration and models from the Gospel of Christ. He is confronted with a lot of injustice in the world and seeks answers. He can hardly find any satisfactory solution to the structures of inequality, injustice and corruption rampant in contemporary society. So he returns to a more personal stand: "As for ourselves, / Don't deny justice to anyone- / Even when you are denied it from everybody. / Do good irrespective of the virtuous and the vice, / Whether reciprocal justice given to you or not."

The author Joseph George, like any sensitive and good-willing person in our muddled world of rotten politics, institutionalized religion and ritual-bound belief-systems, is deeply befuddled by the contradictions and conflicts endemic to the society we daily confront. He, however, tries to keep his head above that depressing level of our social order/disorder with the support of his firm faith in God and the ultimate Good for which everything is created.

This gives hope to an otherwise hopeless world.

(Fr Dr KM George)

PREFACE.

Writing literature in general, or poetry in particular, is not exactly a deliberate act of compulsion, a sort of divine mission self-realized. Joseph George's poems are genuine reflections of his quotidian experiences. He tries to present the problems of an individual who faces the harsh realities of a corrupted society. Pious and innocent people suffer a lot here but the poet believes that a simple man's piety weighs the balance of heaven.

The poems of Joseph George have a didactic input; they propagate a sort of ethical message. Most of them are subjective and highly reflective of his personal experiences. He knows that no one can find an absolute solution to the problems faced by society. In Africa, there is a saying, "Don't think too much, you will get headache" and in a poem, Joseph George writes, "Think little and live comfortably".

I wish his debut "Amidst an Exacerbated World of Cahoots" all success.

Pro. Dr. Alexander Raju.

A word of gratitude:

Author.

Rev.Fr.Dr.K.M.George had a magnanimous soft spoken attitude that he took so many pains to see my work and give a perfect analysis in Foreword.Rev.Father is the best theologian in our Malankara Orthodox Church.Earlier,Rev.Father adorned the post of the Principal of Orthodox theological seminary.

Rev.Father took pains to meticulously going through each and every word of my writings.Gratitude overwhelms in my mind.

Preface is made by Dr.Pro.Alexander Raju,my professor at Baselius College,now teaching in an Ethiopian University and had in his kitty famous novels, poems and short stories.This world famous writer, fortunately my teacher,corrected me and gave the title -Amidst an Exacerbated World of Cahoots.Thankyou Sir for writing preface and making this work a success.

Iam indebted to these two moral giants for making my work a success.My thanks and gratitude from inner hearts cannot be measured by words.

Let God Almighty bless them multitude of blessings and boons.

[illegible]

What keeps you down?

Who is on the way?

Are you afraid, tired or tensed?

What makes you such?

A match box, a candle and a few match sticks.

I am seated under a heavy Speedster fan-

And asked to light the candle.

"Where you strike the match one by one,

You must or should or anyway try to strike it.

Without letting the fire die"

As it is instructed.

I wasted match sticks one by one,
I can't regulate or stop the fan above me.
That is indeed the pity of me,
I can't struggle with unearthly bravado,
In blocking wind and lighting the candle.
I should suffer the wind along with creating the fire.

Anyway I know I can create a fire.
If there is not a Speedster fan,
I could easily lighten it.
What will I do is not a secret.
It is so evident to all of us.

If the situation is vice versa where I am asked -
To create a wind inside a fire stove,
Too sees to be puzzling.

Fan and stove are extremists.
In a world where people easily fan the stove and stove the fan,
It is really poor me struggles to open my eyes.

Recycling with out our knowledge.

This is primarily a satire against snobbery, hypocrisy, artificial mentality like jew-enacted dramas in the time of Jesus, English snobbery with affectation imitated by local powerfults.

Here, innocent, naive and simple people are butchered in the altars of avaricious upper class.

Like "Animal Farm"- by George Orwell-here -"All are equal and some are more equal everywhere in the society".

Like the Father of English poetry, Geoffrey Chaucer who wrote in his Magnum Opus -The Preface to Canterbury Tales-there is some remote connection with the theme in this poem too.

The poem proper.

Essay -1

The value of Christian Perseverance.

@@@@@@@@@@@@@@@@

The thoughts on Christian Perseverance dawned on me by a peculiar incident. Suddenly, one fine morning, a sum of money disappears from my bag. It was kept for a particular purpose. My thoughts went awry. I became suspicious.

I deviated from my normal string of thoughts.

Thoughts of recovery of money led me to stealing thoughts. As the first person lost money by stealing of the second person, the first person is rightfully honoured to steal the amount of money of the second person or others.

Bicycle Thieves by Dossica is a film in which the hero—a painting labourer—amassed his daily returns in justful ways and brought an Italian bicycle with his own sweat resultant money. The cycle he used to transport his wife and children too.

One fine morning, when he was on the ladder to paint, suddenly a studied thief stole his bicycle. He suddenly came down from the ladder and searched for the thief.

Even seeking the help of police, he could not identify his own cycle since all Italian cycles bear a damn sure similarity.

After his several attempts, he decided to steal another cycle as his loss could be recompensated.

But unfortunately, he was booked by police and jailed.

The Christian Perseverance teaches a value that we must not be money minded every time. Even though you are cheated, you will get a next opportunity in life to recompense your loss.

Christian Perseverance teaches us that even though your property being stolen or lost, you have no right and privilege to do wrong. The Christian Perseverance will save you and God will reward your loss by plenty of blessings that you might not realise. As in the Bible, be not like the gentiles who say a tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye. Your father in heaven who bless everyone in spite of worldly or spiritual, will finally bless you through Christian Perseverance and the Christian who perseveres till the last time will inherit the kingdom of God.
